

DOING IT YOURSELF

What it really costs you

Scooping a yard properly takes fifteen to twenty minutes, and it has to happen every week whether or not it is raining, whether or not you are busy, and whether or not anyone feels like it.

OVER A YEAR

13 hours

of weekends, at fifteen minutes a week. Plus the weeks it gets skipped and the yard is twice the job.

A WEEKLY PLAN COSTS

$18.50

a visit, on the $80 monthly plan for one dog. Less than most people spend on a sandwich and a coffee.

$80 a month across 52 weeks works out at $18.46 a visit. Fifteen minutes a week over a year is thirteen hours.

Nothing to cancel later

Month to month. Pause it for winter, change frequency, or stop entirely with a week's notice.

The first one is free with any plan

So the only thing you are risking is the fifteen minutes it takes to sign up.

THE ARITHMETIC

What each plan works out at

One dog. Cost per visit, so you can compare it to something you actually recognise.

Twice weekly $90/mo · ~8.7 visits	$10.40
Weekly $80/mo · ~4.3 visits	$18.50
Every other week $70/mo · ~2.2 visits	$32.30
Once a month $65/mo · 1 visit	$65.00

Twice weekly is the best value per visit and the only plan where the yard is never more than three days from clean. Weekly is what most people choose.

Per-visit figures use an average month of 4.33 weeks. Two dogs and three-or-more are a little higher; the rates are on the next panel.

SIDE BY SIDE

Doing it yourself versus not

You do it 15–20 minutes, every week 13 hours a year It waits for you in the rain Bags in your own bin Skipped weeks double the job	We do it You do nothing $18.50 a visit We run year-round Hauled off your property Same day, every week

The part nobody budgets for
A yard that gets skipped for a month is not four times the work — it is worse than that, because by then it is trodden in, the grass has grown over it, and it stops being a fifteen-minute job.

And the yellow patches
Concentrated nitrogen burns the turf and kills the roots underneath. Reseeding a burnt lawn costs more than a year of weekly service.

Still not sure? The first cleanup is free with any plan, so you can see the difference before you have paid anything.
